

A Listing of Therapists Doing Family Therapy

THIS is the first listing of therapists from mental health and related disciplines reporting that they are active in family therapy. In this listing the term "therapist" means a member of the social work, psychology, or psychiatric profession, or a marriage or pastoral counselor, who sees family members together in treatment sessions usually at frequent intervals, and attempts to deal in some depth with disturbances in their relationships, in order to change some of the negative aspects and promote healthier living. In this listing "family therapy" means treatment together typically of a unit no smaller than two family members, whether of husband and wife or of another pair, and usually means treatment conjointly of at least three persons, typically a mother, her husband, and child. It is recognized that there may be exceptions to this definition that may still fall under the rubric "family therapy."

A listing of this kind is one way of keeping track of the growth in a field of professional work and probably has been overdue and especially needed in the area of family therapy because of the rapid growth of activity in this field over the past few years. This listing should serve two purposes: 1. it will identify those who consider part of their professional identity as a therapist to be that of a family therapist; 2. and thereby, hopefully, it will provide a basis for an effective interchange among these therapists who share a sense of identity in family therapy and heighten the possibility of a more genuine and searching dialogue among them.

The listing does not include the names of all persons who have treated families, for one thing because not all such persons consider themselves family therapists. Listing here does signify that the therapist has indicated a willingness to share information, experience and concepts with colleagues working similarly. Listing means that the therapist is interested in who his colleagues are and how they work. With the rapid development of the field, it seemed to the editor especially pressing that the "less visible" therapists doing family therapy be identified—the therapists not practicing in the metropolitan centers or not otherwise known through publications.

The listing is based on information supplied by the therapists and freely shared with the editor. Those listed have reported that they are doing family therapy and interested in the development of this field, and that they are members in good standing in recognized professional organizations representing their various disciplines (e.g., the American Psychological Association, National Association of Social Workers, American Psychiatric Association and other recognized organizations of professional workers in the United States and other countries).

Those listed were asked to supply information about their background and experience, but they were not asked to fully document their standing as family therapists because to do so would have clearly been premature at this stage of the field's development. Listing here should not be construed as a statement about or endorsement of a therapist's skills or qualities as a family therapist, even though the reader will note in the listing the names of most of the acknowledged outstanding leaders in the field. The listing is primarily one reflecting the fact that a therapist reports he is active in family therapy, interested in the development of the field and in communicating with his colleagues on matters of mutual interest.

The format of the listing is as follows: entries are arranged alphabetically within the states of the United States and then within other countries in which family therapy is practiced. Each entry contains the name, highest academic degree, and then, in most cases, the office address of the therapist. (A few home addresses are included.) Usually the degree will identify the therapist's professional affiliation—that is, whether he is a psychiatrist, psychologist, or social worker; but in the cases in which a worker's discipline is not readily identifiable, a special notation, abbreviated but easily recognizable, will be included following the entrant's degree.

The announcement of this listing was widely made and sufficient time has elapsed between the original announcement and the publication of the listing to insure participation by all those who wished to be included and believed themselves qualified. It is hoped that future editions of the listing will correct any errors or omissions that may have inadvertently been made. Entrants are requested to inform the editor of errors, typographical or other, that they may note. In a small number of cases entrants may not have had sufficient time to complete and return the full amount of requested information about themselves before the listing went to press; in these cases the editor decided that their cooperation could be anticipated.

It is personally gratifying to have this first listing of therapists doing family therapy appear in the pages of PASTORAL PSYCHOLOGY.

Editor's Note. It is obvious from the reaction of our readers that the listing of counseling resources in our Annual Directory is of real importance to them, even when such a listing is incomplete and does not involve a thorough evaluation of the competence of those listed beyond their membership in professional associations. Your editor would have been much happier if the listing of "Therapists Doing Family Therapy" were more comprehensive and involved a more thorough evaluation of competence. However, as Dr. Zuk states in his introduction, this is but a beginning of what might become in the future an important potential resource of reference and consultation for ministers throughout the country.

We publish this with a full awareness of the limitations of the current listing, but in the hope that in spite of these limitations it may serve a useful purpose for our readers.
