I enjoyed your biography of Carl in the current issue of Voices. He comes through with enormous integrity and a fervent dedication to living.

As I read your account, I could feel your involvement and participation in Carl's endeavors. This evidence of mutuality of living increases my conviction that it is impossible to really understand how a therapist functions unless you know him in his family setting. Some of us in the Eastern Division of AAP have been trying to learn more about this aspect of a therapist's "training." We are about to embark on our second annual Family Workshops in the Caribbean to exchange ideas on this topic. We have found that the non-professional members of the therapist's family tend to make the most poignant contributions. I wish that you would consider joining us in our future deliberations to widen and enrich our understanding of what makes a psychotherapist

"tick."

Thanks again for your enjoyable article.

Sincerely,
